FALL-SINCLAIR TRIAL IS HALTED TODAY BY SIDDON'S

Halt Made To Afford Court A Chance for An Investigation

COURTROOM JAMMED

Crowds Form Long Lines Awaiting Opportunity To Enter

By George E. Durno
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1.—The trial of Ex-Secretary of the Interior Albert B. Fall and Harry F. Sinclair, multi-millionaire oil magnate, on charges of fraud and conspiracy in the leasing of the Teapot Dome Naval Oil Reserve, was halted by Justice Frederick L. Siddons today to afford the court an opportunity to investigate grave charges of jury irregularity made by government counsel.

While the jury remained locked up in the jury room, Justice Siddons, retired to his private chambers to hear charges "of grave concern" affecting the progress of the conspiracy trial.

These charges in the form of affidavits were presented to the Court by the Federal prosecutors as a result of a three day investigation by Assistant District Attorney Neil Burkinshaw.

Atlee J. Pomerene, government counsel, arose as soon as court convened and said he wanted to submit a "matter of grave concern" to the court "in the form of affidavits."

Siddons asked Pomerene whether he wanted both jury and public excluded.

"It ought not to be presented in the presence of the jury," said Pomerene gravely.

"I might take a recess then and the matter could be presented to me in chambers in the presence of opposing counsel," the Court ruled.

A recess was taken and the jury filed out while Judge Siddons and opposing counsel went to the Judge's chambers where the charges were to be presented in secret session.

The courtroom was jammed to suffocation and long lines of people stood outside trying to get in for what was expected to be a sensational ending to the famous trial. The opinion was universal that the court would declare a mistrial after hearing the government's charges.

Shortly after the lawyers had retired to the Judge's chambers, Sinclair, escorted by members of his counsel, joined the conference.

An audible murmur ran through the crowd at Pomerene's announcement. The jury didn't seem to realize the seriousness of the little drama as several members visibly smiled with relief in anticipation of a brief vacation from their court work.

The defendants apparently were unmoved. Former Secretary of the Interior Albert B. Fall turned to whisper to his counsel while Harry F. Sinclair, the oil magnate, stared stolidly at the court. The defendants' counsel began a whispered conversation at their table.

Neshaminy Epworth League Enjoys Hallowe'en Party

HULMEVILLE, Nov. 1.—The members of Epworth League of the Neshaminy M. E. Church, were entertained at the home of Miss Lorraine, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Winder, of Middletown Township, last evening, the occasion being a Hallowe'en party.

The guests assembled at eight o'clock in a variety of costumes, prizes being given for the most original, the most comic and the best dressed individual. A number of favors were also given to those who exhibited prowess in competitive games.

The rooms were tastefully decorated with orange and black crepe paper. At a late hour the group assembled about the dining-room table which was laden with a most tempting repast. A huge lighted pumpkin face formed the centre-piece and from the chandelier was also draped trimmings in keeping with the occasion.

BOATMAN FIRES TO CHASE BOYS; ONE HURT

Ordered from Craft, Students Seek Refuge Behind Trees

ASSAILANT BEING HELD

NEW HOPE, Nov. 1.—One boy suffered slight shotgun wounds and several others were endangered Sunday afternoon when a boatman on the Pennsylvania Canal opened fire on a group of students from the Solebury School for Boys, near here.

The boys were in a canoe and as a boat coming down the canal passed the estate of William Lathrop, not far from the school, two of the students climbed aboard with the intention of riding down to the next bridge, a common custom here. One of the boatmen objected to the presence of the two youths and ordered them off enforcing his commands by threatening them with a boathook.

According to the story of the boys, they pulled their canoe into shore and went up on the towpath, after which a boatman fired a shotgun, one of the students being wounded in the leg by the scattering shot. In the following altercation, the other man is said to have drawn a revolver, whereupon the boys took shelter behind trees.

The matter was referred to Mayor R. C. Magill and the Pennsylvania State troopers. When the boat reached the locks below New Hope, Patrolman Walker and the Mayor ordered it tied up and took the men in custody. The one who did the shooting gave his name as Leichter. They attempted to justify their action by saying that the boys had stoned them after they were ordered from the boat. They were placed in the town lock-up and will be given a hearing today before Justice Bernard McDonnell.

The boy wounded was Kifford Warner, whose home is at Nantuxet, Mass. The injury is not serious.

Mr. Washburn, headmaster of the school, stated that he did not think the school authorities would push a prosecution of the case. It is only their desire that the boys be not molested, he said.

It was Percetti's first day on the job. After the accident he was rushed to the hospital by Eugene McCole, better known as "Snowball," a Bristol boy who is employed on the same job.

It is thought that one toe will have to be amputated. Percetti and three other members of the crew arrived at the job in Hanover the day before the accident.

WHAT BURGESS ANDERSON'S LETTER MEANT

(EDITORIAL)

SO far as we have been able to ascertain, John F. Smoyer stands out as the only person in Bristol unable to understand the import and full meaning of Burgess Anderson's recent letter to the voters of the First Ward.

Of course, there is nothing so very strange about Smoyer's inability to understand, and it is quite characteristic of the man, that being unable to comprehend the plain statements of fact himself, he should assume that they carried no meaning to the minds of the rest of the voters of the First Ward.

Such was his attitude of mind during his four years of futility as a member of Borough Council that he could not even understand the motives of men who were willing and anxious to give of their time, energy and ability for the advancement of their community.

And what he could not understand was invariably the object of his suspicion. Men who did not see as he saw, or understand as he understood, were crooks, or puppets, or hirelings, or what-nots.

Characteristically, too, he could not conceal the fact that he could not comprehend the Burgess' plain statements. He had to advertise it.

In a statement over his own signature, in last week's issue of the Independent, he said:

"My voters"—note the absolute ego and the self-assumed dictatorship — "My voters need no encouragement to vote for me . . ."

"And as for the letter from the Chief Burgess, there is nothing to answer. He asserts nothing, he proves nothing and he says nothing . . ."

Well, in the parlance that Smoyer probably can understand, we think that the Burgess "said a mouthful." But because the illustrious statesman and publicist of the First Ward could not comprehend the Burgess' meaning, we shall endeavor to elucidate.

We shall not waste time "explaining" the Burgess' direct statements, which were put in the clearest English that could be employed. But the underlying meaning of his whole communication, as we see it, was this:

A short year from now the country will enter another Presidential Election. By their election of a Chief Executive then, and the members of both branches of Congress who are to be elected at that time, the people will determine the character of the political, fiscal and economic policies that shall control our affairs for the ensuing four years.

All that happens in the intervening twelve months, and especially all that happens in a political way, will be contributory to the shaping of the result that shall be registered in November, 1928.

It is well, therefore, that we should keep that and some equally important facts well in mind as we determine our political course for November of this year.

For instance, we should not lose sight of the fact that the whole of the great growth of our nation, and especially its transformation from a predominantly agricultural country to the position of the foremost industrial nation in the world, not only has taken place within the life of the Republican Party, but almost entirely under its administration, and, therefore, as a consequence of its sound policies of stability, progress and prosperity.

From the Civil War to the World War, a period of more than half a century, our country was under Democratic administration but twice—Cleveland, 1884 to 1888, and again from 1892 to 1896—and the disastrous economic consequences of the second Cleveland administration served so forcefully to drive home the unfortunate results of the first, that no Democratic President came into office again until 1912, when Theodore Roosevelt split the Republican Party and thus permitted Woodrow Wilson to win the Presidency with a very distinct minority of the popular vote.

Wilson's re-election in 1916 was achieved largely with the meaningless and ultimately fictitious plea that "he kept us out of war," but practically his entire regime was co-extensive with the World War, which prevented the disasters of Democratic doctrine and policy from being effective, for the simple reason that the United States was called upon practically to produce for the entire world, and we were therefore the beneficiaries of an artificial prosperity which was wholly the consequence of the greatest war in history.

Only in its final two years, when the World War was over, did the Wilson administration afford any real criterion of Democratic policies and their effects, and we all know that although the industrial nations of Europe were then only beginning to rehabilitate and re-establish their mills and factories, the low tariff that had been enacted by a Democratic Congress and President permitted such a flood of foreign goods to come into this country that within a few months after the Armistice was signed there were 5,000,000 men and women without employment in the United States.

That was the experience, the background, which brought the Republican Party back to power by the largest majority ever given any party in the history of the nation.

It can truthfully be said, therefore, that the great growth of our country since the Civil War, and its transformation from an agricultural to the foremost industrial nation, have in no wise been a consequence of Democratic policy or administration, but have been accomplished in spite of the brief but disastrous periods in which the policies of Democratic administration have been effective.

All of us are aware of these facts, but sometimes we permit ourselves to lose sight of their importance and significance.

We are an industrial community. Industry, furnishing employment which in turn translates itself into purchasing power, is the backbone of our welfare and prosperity. Industry cannot prosper, cannot even continue, in the United States, with our standards of wages and living, except under the policies of Republican administration. To Bristol, therefore, Republican success in 1928 is of supreme and paramount importance.

It is well to remember, however, that a political party is merely the sum total of its supporters, and that party loyalty is the essence of party strength. And party loyalty is not a seasonal thing. If healthy and enduring party strength is to be maintained, so that the party can at all times function at its maximum efficiency, party loyalty must be constant. A party cannot divide upon one occasion, and then reunite effectively to meet some important crisis which may be upon it within a few months.

Surely, the examples of Republican party loyalty should be found above all in those communities which are essentially and wholly dependent for their welfare and prosperity upon the policies of the Republican Party.

With the exception of a single Ward, Bristol is a predominantly Republican community. It is logically so, for Republicanism to Bristol is merely a matter of intelligent self-interest.

Being Republicans, we should be loyal and consistent Republicans. We should support the party nominees, not merely as a matter of party loyalty, but as an endorsement of the spirit and purpose of the Direct Primary in which we, as Republicans, participated.

It behooves all of us, therefore, to support ALL of the Republican candidates in the approaching November Election.

That, we believe, was the real meaning of Burgess Anderson's letter. Democrat Smoyer did not understand. He wouldn't. But we believe that the thinking voters of the First Ward all understood it, and that they will act in accordance with their intelligent understanding next Tuesday.

Shannahan Is Hurt On Yardley Bridge

Timothy Shannahan, 65 years old, of Yardley, is in Mercer Hospital, Trenton, N. J., in a serious condition, suffering from a severe concussion of the brain, a broken leg and a possible fracture of several ribs. August P. Scherer, of 111 Bert avenue, Trenton, driver of the machine which struck the man on the Yardley bridge, took him to St. Francis Hospital. He later surrendered to police, explaining that he did not see Shannahan.

When an automobile in which they were riding figured in a collision with a truck on Broad Street Park last Sunday night, Catherine Havryzko, 14 years old, of 133 Dickinson street, and Stephen Baranoski, 39 years old, of 29 Webster street, were slightly injured. They were treated at St. Francis Hospital.

John Nagy, 11 years old, of 441 Genesee street, was slightly injured when a bus of the Central Transportation Company struck a wagon in which he was riding. He was treated at St. Francis Hospital. The bus was driven by John Sent, of Hopewell. The mishap occurred in Mercerville. Sent will be arraigned before Recorder Chance on a reckless driving charge tomorrow.

The wagon was driven by Kalman Hodoze, of near Mercerville. He was unhurt. The horse was slightly injured.

HUNTERS BEATING BUSHES IN GREAT NUMBERS TODAY

Estimated That 12,000 At Least Are In The Field

200 OF THEM WOMEN

Guns are out in force today and the country resounds with the crack of their rifles. It is believed that the woods of Bucks County are being beaten today by a larger number of hunters than ever before.

Up until closing time yesterday 7000 hunters' licenses had been issued at the office of the County Treasurer of Bucks County at Doylestown.

On the eve of the opening of the small game season in Bucks County, the greatest influx of non-resident hunters in the history of the county was in progress. Every hotel and inn throughout the favorite hunting sections of Bucks County was filled with hunters last night eager to get an early start this morning.

That at least 12,000 hunters will be in the field in Bucks County today was the prediction made by State Game Protector Warren Fretz, of Doylestown. Among this great crowd of hunters will be at least 200 women.

Small game is more numerous this year than at any time during the past two years and it is predicted that the early starters today will return in quick order with the day's limit of five rabbits, two male pheasants and six squirrels.

A large portion of Bucks County is posted against gunning although hunters will be allowed to gun on a portion of the posted land if they first ask permission of the owner.

Hoodlum hunting has caused most of the land to be posted, Game Protector Fretz explained. "The great influx of city gunners is due in part to the amount of unemployment and many will spend the time totting a gun rather than looking for work," the officer declared.

Much damage has been done in Bucks County by the great migration of squirrels to the county and game officers are issuing an appeal to sportsmen to greatly decrease the number of squirrels by concentrating on them for the first few days.

Pheasants are plentiful and can be seen out in the open in practically any section of Bucks County by driving along the highways. The birds come into the open fields because of the scarcity of their natural food in the woodland sections.

Rabbits are plentiful but the weather is a bit too warm for good hunting. One veteran, James Lovett, aged 92, of Doylestown township, secured a hunting license today.

State officers will be stationed in various sections of the county starting early today to keep down law violations as much as possible. One warning issued by the officers was that hunters totting guns while under the influence of intoxicating liquor will be prosecuted. It was pointed out that such action is a very good cause for the revocation of a license.

GAS EXPLOSION IS BLAMED FOR FIRE IN PERKASIE BLD'G

Wrecking of Business Place Is Described by An Expert

SUIT IS BEING HEARD

Claims That the Odor May Not Have Been Detected

(Special to Courier)

DOYLESTOWN, Nov. 1.—That the cause of the damage done to a Perkassie business and apartment building wrecked about a year ago was due to an explosion of illuminating gas in a front room of the first floor of the building, causing a fire to follow, was the reason given by an expert for the Insurance Company of North America yesterday in the Court of Common Pleas of Bucks County. The insurance company is the defendant.

Suit was brought by Jonas Apfolaum and Fred B. Neft against the company. The building was wrecked on the morning of December 13, 1926, when Leon Maurer was killed and several others injured. The suit is for the collection of an insurance claim the plaintiffs allege has not been paid by the defendant company. The amount of the claim is approximately $2,000. There are other suits pending as a result of the same conflagration.

H. F. McCrossin, of New York City, a consulting engineer, who during the World War was assistant superintendent of operations of Muscle Shoals, was called by the defense as an expert witness.

"What in your opinion was the cause of this destruction?" the expert was asked by Horace Schell, Philadelphia, attorney for the insurance company, after McCrossin had described the investigation of the wreckage that he made two days after the fire.

"In my opinion," testified McCrossin, there was an explosion of illuminating gas in the front store room of the building, and that the explosion preceded a fire and caused the fire. There is every evidence of explosion in this case and it had all the earmarks of an explosion of illuminating gas."

The expert, in answer to a question asked in cross examination by Attorney Harry E. Grim, for the plaintiffs, said that in his opinion persons in the vicinity would not necessarily smell the illuminating gas previous to the explosion in this case, or any other for that matter.

The case is being tried in Court No. 1 before Judge Samuel E. Shull, of Stroudsburg.

Soap Bandits Under Bail For Next Term of Court

The three Philadelphians arrested early yesterday morning by Bristol police as they were driving from the plant of the Manhattan Soap Company, here, with a truck loaded with soap valued at over $4,000 were each lodged in the county jail at Doylestown. They are being held in $2,000 bail each.

The driver of the truck, Robert Dunn, Baden, Beaver County, claimed that he was sitting on the truck parked along the sidewalk in Philadelphia when he was approached and hired. Two other men were then picked up and the trip made to Bristol to get the soap. He pleaded ignorance of any theft.

After hearing the case Justice Kraft held them under $2,000 bail for the next term of court. District Attorney Arthur M. Eastburn was present at the trial and prosecuted the case.

Drives Car Into Rear Of Heavily Loaded Truck

Joseph Palumbo, of Bristol Township, while driving along the Highway, just south of Bristol Borough, last night, drove directly into the rear of a large truck. The truck displayed both red and green lights on the rear but apparently Palumbo did not see them.

Palumbo suffered a fracture, contusion and laceration of the nose. One stitch was required. He received treatment at the Harriman Hospital where he was taken by Officer Gallagher. Palumbo's car was considerably damaged.

STREET CARS NOT DOOMED

Struggling under the staggering effects of automobile competition, congested streets and inadequate capital, electric railways still see a ray of hope. Their owners and operators have largely lost their fear that the motor bus will put the electric cars and tracks on the scrap heap, having met this threat in many cities by operating bus lines as auxiliaries to the electric lines.

The private automobile remains their great problem, as it cuts both ways—taking away a heavy percentage of revenue that would otherwise go to street railways and hindering operation by clogging the highways. All electric lines were declaring dividends before popularizing of the automobile; now many that have not been driven out of business are operating at a loss.

While thousands of miles of track have been torn up since the war and more will be torn up in the years to come, there is a conviction that no other method of transportation as yet devised can take the place of the street car in populous centers. As an essential public utility it will overcome the difficulties and solve the problems that threaten it.

If they are to win back their old patrons and attract new ones the street railways must improve their equipment, speed-up service and make radical changes in policy. Quieter, more luxurious and more externally attractive cars are helping in some cities. Smoother tracks bring business in others. Better trained and more accommodating car crews would attract patronage.

When street cars can deliver their passengers to their destination in less time than they can by private automobile, motor bus or taxi they will regain public favor. Users of urban transportation facilities are more concerned with saving time than saving pennies.

ADVERTISING HELPS CREDIT

There is one way by which a business man's credit is improved, and that is by a policy of consistent advertising. Bank men believe in advertising, for they know it pays. Their feeling, therefore, is that when a merchant who is a good advertiser applies for a loan, that a reasonable amount of goods, bought by him on credit, is likely to be turned over quickly and promptly paid for, on account of his methods of keeping his goods constantly before the public.

Discriminating buyers of every class know they can get fresh goods from the store that advertises. The merchant who advertises seldom has shop-worn goods. And in that way advertising helps the merchant's credit not only with the banks but with his customers. And one is just as important as the other.

SYNOPSIS
In 1896, Bob, son of Hank Armstrong, a horse fancier, knowing his father's hatred for machines, is secretly inventing gasoline engines and openly courting Rose Robbins. Hank, discovering Bob's interest in automobiles, horsechips him. Rose intervenes, but Bob leaves home. She promises to wait for him. Steve Bentley proposes to Rose and is refused. In revenge he, knowing that Bob has returned as a racer, plays on Hank's hatred of cars, slyly telling him that a car in the gas tank will cause an explosion. The fact that Bob is the "Red Demon" racer is, however, unknown to Hank. Rose informs Bob of the dangerous condition of his father. Now—

The shrill toot-toot of an automobile horn brought him up with a start. Good God! Was he going mad? He was back in the yard staring at the debris about him. He clasped his hand to his head. His face became convulsed with fury. He seized a carriage pole and beat madly on the old wheels that gazed on him with blind eyes. He yelled, as he struck each blow. They were all horseless carriages, devil-wagons! He'd ruin them, mar them—beat them, until they were unable to move. Out with them! Down with them!

His cries and his wild laughter attracted the children playing in the adjoining yard, and they ran to peer through the knotholes in the fence. They saw an old man, shabby, ill-kempt, striking at the wheels of carriages and wheels. They saw a tortured face, writhing in agony, and a gaping mouth that screamed hoarsely. And in terror they backed away and ran as fast as ever they could.

Hank was panting now; his blows were growing weaker and weaker. His madness acted like dope on his system, and now his new-found strength was deserting him. The carriage pole dropped from his listless hands. His body trembled as though in a fit of ague. His legs would no longer support him. He sank down on the step, his head on his arms. Racking sobs shook his emaciated frame.

For a long time he sat, lulled by the false quiet his outburst of emotions had brought. Gradually his mind turned to the old subject—the horseless carriage and the horse. He ran his old races over again; brought home again his old trophies. He remembered the day he had won the Tri-State meet with Sloe Eyes in the harness; he recalled how he had pitted Bright Eyes against the devil-wagon—and won. He brought to mind the victory that had turned to ashes in his mouth when his friend, the Mayor, had asked to have his horses sold off to buy a machine. He quickly passed over the events that had brought about the break between Bob and himself.

And as his thoughts twisted and turned, his expression hardened. He looked again over the yard that told the whole story in its own, silent way. He began to smile—a cunning, evil smile; a smile that did not belong to the face that harbored it. If that Red Demon's machine should blow up tomorrow before all those people in the grandstand no one would ride in a car again! Sulphur in the gas! He laughed long and loudly!

CHAPTER XIX

That evening the "Red Demon" arrived in Maple City. But it was late before he could escape the crowd of admirers that gathered at Mayor Robbins' home to welcome him. And equally late before he found himself alone and able to talk with Rose. The entire town had turned out to pay tribute to its distinguished protegee. Everyone wanted to hear the story from Bob's own lips as to how his phenomenal success had come about. And time after time Bob modestly repeated a briefer sketch of his career in Detroit. But his ever word was portentous and fraught with great meaning. He was the village lion.

The older men plied him with questions concerning the future possibilities of the automobile and the conditions of business in Detroit, and listened to his remarks with bated breath. Small boys' heads were turned when Bob spoke to them, and their aims found new directions—firemen and policeman seemed tame in comparison to a real, live speedster. Matrons vied with each other in seeing that the man of the hour was mercilessly swamped with salad and coffee cake and ice cream. Girls worshipped at the shrine of glory, and young men cast despairing glances, mingled with envy, at the "Red Demon" and hoped to goodness that he wouldn't stay in town long.

But Bob had eyes for no other girl than Rose. To him she was the center of all attraction, and he was anxiously waiting for the time when they could be together and talk. He wanted to hear whether she had missed him, and whether she still loved him. He wanted to hear all the things a lover longs to hear. And, too, he knew that Rose could tell him of his father. For he looked through the crowd, and in vain, for the familiar form of the horseman. He had had no letters from home for so long—many things might have happened. And he knew that there was more to Rose's bits of news than appeared on the surface. He felt that something was wrong, some place.

At any other time, as Bob well remembered, his father had been the life and instigator of any such gathering. He realized that the older man's antipathy might have kept him from coming to a reception for a driver of a horseless carriage—yet when it was his own son! But he never thought of the times that he had stayed away from his father's races and celebrations. Nor did he realize, could he realize, his father's present condition. He could not imagine that dictatorial and outstanding figure so completely submerged in a lethargy of his own creation, so out of touch with village gossip, so forgotten by everyone, that he had not heard of the arrival of his son.

And so when the last guest had finally called farewell from the steps, Bob turned to the Mayor and his daughter, and the three stood in the hallway, talking.

"I want to tell you, I'm mighty proud of you, boy," the Mayor patted Bob on the back. "We're all proud of you."

"Indeed we are," echoed Rose. "Well, I want to thank you for everything you've done for me, Mayor," Bob answered. "You certainly gave me a fine start with that letter to Haynes. I'll never forget that."

"Tut-tut!" chuckled the Mayor. "Do it all over again. But I'm going to leave you young people alone, now. I know you got a lot to say to each other. But see that you get some sleep tonight," he prodded Bob slyly in the ribs. "Don't forget you got that race to run tomorrow—and we're banking on you to win. And you'll have lots of other nights to set up together—may be too many," he chuckled, as he started upstairs.

"Let's go out and take a walk," Bob suggested. "I'm not accustomed to so much fuss and feathers."

"All right," Rose assented, putting on her hat. "I know it must have been a tiring evening for you, dear, and especially after your trip, too."

"They wandered out into the cool night air, arm in arm. Instinctively Bob turned in the direction of his old home.

"Rose," he began anxiously, "there are so many things I have to say to you, but you must forgive me if I start off by asking you about Dad. I've been worried about him. I know you've written me something of what's been going on, but I'm afraid you've been trying to keep my feelings from being hurt, and I'd like to know just what condition things are in. Don't be afraid of hurting me—I'm hardened, now," he laughed.

"Well, Bob, I don't know just how to begin," Rose faltered. "Your father isn't well—I know that. He's a changed man."

"In what way?" Bob asked. "I don't just know—but you remember how very strict he used to be, and how much he hated automobiles?"

Bob nodded, his thoughts reverting to the fatal morning in the lively stable office.

"It just seems as though he hated everything and everybody, now," Rose went on quickly, reading Bob's thoughts. "Dad tried hard enough to be friends with him, but it was no use. Your father simply wouldn't have any friends. He wouldn't even speak to anyone. You remember, I wrote you about the day I tried to talk to him about you?"

Tullytown Boy Scouts Hold First Meeting

The first meeting of the Tullytown Troop, Boy Scouts of America, was held Saturday evening at the Christian Community House with Scoutmaster George W. Obermier in charge. It is the present plan of the committee in charge to limit the number of scouts to two patrols. After the Scoutmaster had given a demonstration and explanation of the nine knots to be learned by the tenderfeet, Lester Shoemaker, chairman of the troop committee, gave a very interesting talk to the boys.

After a number of lively games were played, Assistant Scoutmaster Earl Nickerson gave the scouts a few lessons in drilling.

The next meeting will be on Saturday evening. Tests will be given for the tenderfoot class. It is hoped that a large percentage of boys will pass. Tenderfoot badges will be issued to the successful candidates.

Come on in ... the smoking's fine!

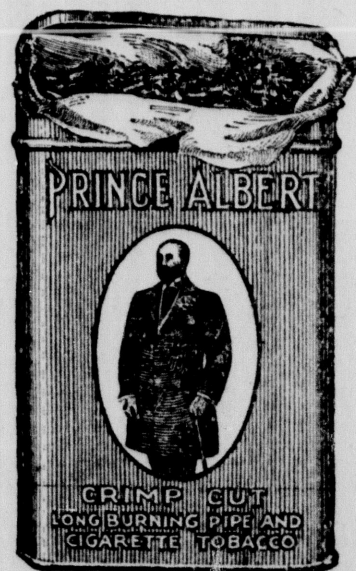

ARE you on the outside looking in? Come on in. Bring your pipe. Load it with cool, long-burning Prince Albert, and you're a member, with full privileges, right off the bat.

Of course, we're happy. Just open a tidy red tin of P. A. and you'll begin to understand what makes us that way. What a fragrance! And that's only a starter. Tuck a load into the bowl of your old jimmy-pipe and connect with a match. Oh, Man—that taste!

Cool as reveille on a frosty morning. Sweet as a three-day leave. Mild as a brand-new rookie—mild and mellow, yet with that full, rich tobacco-body that puts the joy-o'-living into every single puff. You know what I mean, and I mean Prince Albert's got it! Try P. A.

The first puff will tell you why P. A. is known as the National Joy Smoke. It will tell you why this one brand is the world's largest seller. And every other puff is just as good. Get started, Man!

And look how much you get—TWO full ounces in every tin.

PRINCE ALBERT

—the national joy smoke!
